

SYMPOSIUM

WELCOMING REMARKS

ROBERT W. BENNETT*

I am pleased to welcome you to the 1995 Federalist Society Student Symposium on Originalism, Democracy, and the Constitution. I express my pleasure both as Dean of the school that is hosting this Symposium and personally as well. The subject of this conference is one that has long intrigued me, and I shall turn an attentive ear to the exceptional series of Panel discussions over the next two days.

I have long been an admirer of the academic integrity that characterizes the Federalist Society's symposia, and this Symposium is no exception. Indeed, the organizers of the gathering have done such an extraordinary job of bringing together participants from all ideological persuasions that this Symposium promises a series of debates and discussions that will become classics in the continuing dialogue about our constitutional order.
